

Training on Data Analysis Using SPSS (Beginner's Course)

Date	19-23 April 2010
Duration	5 days
Cost	PhP 7,500 (Local participants) USD 400 (Foreign participants)
Venue	UP Population Institute Computer Laboratory Room 334 Palma Hall, University of the Philippines Diliman, Quezon City
Maximum no. of participants	20

Course description The course is designed to provide an intensive introduction to the latest version of the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS), now known as Predictive Analytics SoftWare (PASW). SPSS is a user-friendly Windows-based statistical software and a powerful and versatile tool for data analysis.

The training combines lecture and hands-on laboratory sessions. The course involves an analysis of a subset of a large dataset but participants who are currently working on a particular research project are welcome to bring their own data to work on for the duration of the training.

Who should attend? The course is recommended for faculty members, graduate students, business analysts and other researchers who want to enhance their data analysis capability. The training targets those with limited statistical background and is also an appropriate refresher for those whose statistical experience was gained many years ago.

Prerequisites Participants should have knowledge of basic statistical concepts and should have experience in computer operations using MS Windows. Experience with SPSS is not necessary, although a basic understanding of the purpose and functions of the software is helpful.

Course outline The course covers the following topics:

- Overview of the research process
- Overview of SPSS
- Univariate analysis and graphical presentation
 - Frequency distributions, Measures of central tendency and dispersion
- Data management
 - Variable creation and transformation, Selection of cases
- Bivariate analysis
 - Crosstabs, Chi-square test, ANOVA, t-test
- Linear regression analysis
- Presenting research results
